Tarra's

Destiny

Once upon a time, there live a dear little fairy named tarra. She could change her actions, her wings, her hair, and her shoes to match the season. In spring her action was she liked to run and jog, her wings have Ts on them, her hair is wavy, and her shoes are white and yellow.

In summer, she does cartwheels in the soft grass, her wings have hearts on them, her hair is in piggy tails, her shoes are pink and blue. In winter, her actions are she sits in her house by the fire with a leaf for a blanket, her hair is pinned up in a bun, and her shoes are striped green and black.

In Fall her hair was in braids, her actions were she danced, her wings were sparkly, and she wore pink sandals.

Tarra wrapped with a blanket

One day, a turtle came and stayed for two seasons, and the turtle asked Tarra why she changed. Tarra said, "I don't know, Let's go ask the queen. So they went to the queen and asked her why she changed depending on what season it was. The queen said, "Have you ever noticed how I change, too?"

Then Tarra asked, "So what does this all mean?" "Well, I think someone's chosen you to be queen," she said,

Right after she said that, she was silent and as still as a statue. All of a sudden she (though very surprised) finally did notice that that the queen was changing, too. So she quickly said goodbye and raced home so she could get ready to be queen. She wrote on a piece of paper what her mom always said before she died. Here's what she wrote:

This world is never too small for someone like you, but let your talent show and you'll stand out true.
